STEAM Science and Robotics

These weeklong camps teach children basic, design, building, programming, and mechanics. We use an exclusive robotics for all of our robotics camps. These robotic kits connect with snap and lock components, but also combine with nuts and bolts. We use plastic, metal, and specially synthesized materials for our robotic kits.

All campers begin at beginner level for the first-time attendance, and can return for multiple sessions to progress through seven increasingly difficult levels of our robotics instruction. These levels range from building simple structures and pre-programmed robots to programmable robots, which include metal skeletons and advanced components. Level One Kits include curriculum that covers design, construction, mechanics, and operation of a robot. Our facilitators teach the structure concept and movement control of the various robots built. Level Two Kits advance in design, structure, and use not only our plastic, but also metal pieces. Level Two also includes a programming component. All of our robots use a programmable motherboard that gives the designer the ability to use new sensors and controls. Returning campers will advance to the next level. Save $66 off when you register for a second session.
